Although the project isn't ready yet, Sam hops into the Accelerator and leaps. As Tom Stratton, an Air Force test pilot, Sam finds his memory Swiss cheesed, with only enough left to know that he is not where or when he belongs. Al explains that the project has gone awry and that the only way Sam can leap out is by flying the X-2 to Mach 3. Instead, Sam leaps after saving his wife and child, only to find that rather than leaping home, he's leapt into Ken Fox, a minor league baseball player in Texas, at the end of the 1968 season, where he must make the winning play in order to leap.

As Arnold Watkins, better known as the Midnight Marauder, Sam has to persuade a fraternity to stop using chicken races as a part of their hazing ceremonies, while Al tries to convince Arnold to stop trying to get himself killed in retaliation for his parents' deaths 12 years earlier. When Alia, the evil leaper, appears on the scene, Sam becomes determined to take her with him when he leaps.

( Since "Return" and "Revenge" were aired back-to-back as a two-hour movie, their guest cast listings were unfortunately combined. For the time being (until I have enough information to extract them, perhaps when the episodes are rerun), the guest cast listed for both episodes are somewhat inaccurate. In essence, Renee Coleman and Carolyn Seymour are the only guests who appeared in both episodes. Anyone else whose name appears under both episodes was actually in one or the other, but NOT both. We apologize for the inconvenience.)

Title: Revenge
